The world has lost a French legend. Paul Bocuse was an ambassador of French gastronomy and excellence.

A Michelin three-star chef for more than fifty years who was named Chef of the Century in 2011 by the Culinary Institute of America, Chef Bocuse was an international culinary reference. He was a pioneer, an innovator, a jack-of-all-trades, a man of extraordinary generosity. He put as much passion into his cookbooks as he did into his cooking.

Chef Bocuse authored many books, most of them published by his historical editor Ghislaine Bavoillot at Flammarion, including La Cuisine du Marché, first published in 1976 with over 1 million copies sold worldwide. In a collaboration that spanned over forty years, Flammarion published his books in French and English, including The Complete Bocuse in 2012, and many of his books were translated around the world in Chinese, Danish, Dutch, Finnish, German, Greek, Hungarian, Italian, Japanese, Portuguese (Brazil), Russian, Spanish (Spain and Argentina), Swedish....

Flammarion expresses sincere condolences to the Chef's family and friends.
